Sign Language

No one knows who invented sign language, but we think it was most likely the deaf themselves. Different groups made up their own hand gestures. In the U.S. there are about 17 million hearing impaired people, 2 million of which are deaf. Every sign in sign language has been chosen to best represent the word it stands for. Since there are so many words in the English language, there is not a sign for every word. For words like that, the signer would have to sign out each letter. Sign language was officially brought to the U.S. in the 19th century. It is continually growing among the hearing impaired and many more. Now it has grown to be the fourth most used language in the United States.

Zebras

Zebras are striped mammals that live in Africa. They are smaller than a horse, their relative, and they look like the wild donkey. They have large ears, a short mane that stands up, and a tufted tail. The stripes camouflage it from predators like lions and hunters. The Mountain zebra is the smallest zebra, which stands about 4 feet high at the shoulders. The Grevy's zebra is the largest zebra, which is usually around 5 feet high at the shoulders.
